

--ABSTRACT

The present invention contemplates a method for percutaneously providing oxygenated blood retrogradely from the left ventricle via coronary sinus to the heart tissue without a significant left-to-right shunt. The present invention contemplates a two-piece stent combination generally having an arterializing stent and a restricting covered stent.--